The aims of the study were to assess the safety, feasibility and efficacy of the modified pancreaticojejunostomy to decrease pancreatic fistula after rectal cancer surgery, and to investigate its superiority over traditional gastrojejunostomy in rectal cancer surgery. All patients who underwent modified pancreaticojejunostomy and traditional gastrojejunostomy after rectal cancer surgery between May 2006 and June 2012 were reviewed.

Forty-four patients were included in the modified pancreaticojejunostomy group and 129 patients in the traditional gastrojejunostomy group. The median operation time, intraoperative blood loss, time to first meal, hospital stay, postoperative complications and mortality were analyzed. The average time to first meal (168 ± 39 min vs. 381 ± 75 min; P

In 24 patients with carcinomas of the cervix uteri and the endometrium who were treated by the concomitant administration of Etoposide (400 mg/m²/d i.v., days 1-3) and Floxuridine (200 mg/m²/d i.v., days 1-5) could be evaluated the effects of the combination therapy on the tumour volume, the histology of the tumours and the time course of the pharmacokinetics of Etoposide and Floxuridine. The combination of Etoposide and Floxuridine was associated with a decreased tumour volume in 21 of 24 patients. Among these patients, the drug-induced tumour regression was more or equal to 50% in 8, up to 75% in 9 and less than 50% in 8 cases. The mean regression rate of the treated tumours was 72%. The cellular proliferation index (CPI) significantly decreased in 72% of the patients (0.1-0.9%), while the proliferation index (P.I.) only in 33% of the cases (0.1-0.6%) was reduced. In parallel, the histological typing changed from moderately differentiated carcinomas (Grades II-III) to less differentiated ones (Grades I-II), with an increase in the cellular differentiation and a decrease in mitotic counts. The drug-induced tumour regression and the cellular differentiation were not correlated with each other. No correlation could be found between the drug-induced reduction in tumour volume and the time course of the pharmacokinetics of Etoposide and Floxuridine.CR30], [@CR31]\]. However, the TBs and FPs could not differentiate the BMEs correctly. Adding the clinical relevance, we proposed a computer aided diagnosis model to reduce the errors by combining the features extracted from TBs and
